The world is changing and architecture is adapting, and a new wave of young practices in London emerges. They are armed with bold ideas, digital tools, new studio set ups and innovative designs and approaches. In our Next Generation series, join us in hailing this nexus of exciting studios from the UK capital through an ongoing series of weekly profiles. Pup Architects, run by directors Chloë Leen, Theo Molloy and Steve Wilkinson, put architecture’s role in enriching social and cultural life in the community at the heart of their work.

The architects, who have previously worked at practices such as Sam Jacob, Ash Sakula and Grimshaw, eventually formally joined forces in 2017 forming Pup Architects, an energetic, community-orientated studio based in East London.
